RNs: Prepare for your next career as a clinical nurse adjunct instructor

This 48–hour program will train skilled primary care nurses to become clinical nurse adjunct instructors in established nursing programs. With the shortage in qualified nursing faculty continually cited as a major reason for the inability to meet the number of students who are interested in pursuing nursing as a career, the RNs who are clinically proficient but not educators require orientation to the role and skills necessary to meet the need. The role and concepts of clinical teaching will be addressed along with planning and assessing student learning activities.

Enhance your marketability and career opportunities as a nurse educator!
