This course introduces students to the great northern movement. This will include a discussion of the literature, history and sociological impact of the people's movement from the agrarian south to the industrial north. Students will be introduced to ideas in magical realism, creolization, pastoralism and assimilation as they appear in the stories of the people. By using structural, feminist, reader response and new historicism analysis, students will discuss the presentation of the African Diaspora. In order to further our analysis of the stories of the people, we will study, using historical and sociological research, the structural conditions of the post-Civil War South. We will also study the the processes of urbanization, employing a comparative perspective of the Black experience with other social groups. In doing so, we will focus on the creation of the urban underclass, segregation, a changing Black identity, as well as some of the scholarly debates on these phenomena. A historical analysis will also be necessary in an effort to properly situate the narrative of the African Diaspora and the philosophies and/or ideologies that were prominent within the African Diaspora of that time.
